

Internships in a European news agency on Higher Education policy

(for Leonardo grant-holders and Erasmus students)

The European higher education news and communication agency ESNA in Berlin is advertising internship and training positions for young professionals and higher education graduates for the upcoming academic year 2010/2011.

Eligible candidates will be university students or graduates from the subject areas of publishing, journalism, modern languages or politics who hope to complete an internship to compliment their studies. The unpaid, part-time internships, lasting at least three, preferably six months, can be funded by the EU's Erasmus and Leonardo programmes, and are approved by ECTS (the Europe-wide system of academic credits).

Candidates should have very good written and spoken language skills in their native tongue and at least one other European language, a passion for journalism and a hard-working, task-oriented approach.

Interns' duties include multi-lingual research, public relations work in an international context and precise, accurate copy-writing and translation. The internship will be relevant for future careers in the media and/or in international or European political organisations.

Deadline for applications: 31st Octobre 2010
